CAMP ON STREET

HOW PEOPLE ARE LIVING IN SAN FRANCISCO

Former Carson People Write of the Daily Life in the Ruined City

The following letter from Mrs. George McLaughlin, formerly of this city, to her sister gives a fair idea of how people are now living in San Francisco.

The life we are now leading is not encouraging to letter writing, as we are kept pretty busy getting the wherewithal together to feed a hungry family. I don't mean that we are suffering but we have to cook out of doors, are not allowed to burn lights in the evening and this camp life has made us as hungry as wolves.

Our house escaped but our chimneys were ruined like every one else's. All the city from where Haight street joins Market, down to the ferry is a mass of ruins. Thousands are camped on the hills and in the park and last night there was a hard driving rain that would have saved millions a few days ago, but now it makes every one all that more uncomfortable.

We are living a queer life. All the small stores were soon sold out and the goods in the large ones were confiscated by the U. S. Government, and the contents used for public relief. We can buy absolutely nothing at present and have to go every day and stand in line and get our free rations with the thousands of other people in the same boat. These lines reach for blocks. The kids have developed in to very successful foragers and are out a good part of the time hustling.

It is astonishing how well the people are served under the circumstances. The people of the country have not contended themselves with merely sending bread meat and potatoes but luxuries have poured in on the people of San Francisco in the most surprising way. Many of those good things we are told came from Nevada. I talked with people who had lost nearly all their clothing and had to accept second hand clothing that came in. It was a matter of comment that some of the clothing that come

Red Cross Work

Yesterday the members of the Red Cross in this city forwarded to San Francisco seven cases and several baskets of goods for the relief of San Francisco. The shipment consisted of bedding, shoes, clothing, infant clothes and necessities for the stricken.

This society throughout the Union is doing noble work and Carson is only one branch, but she is doing her share.

H. C. Dunn and wife, came up from the West yesterday. Mrs. Dunn lost everything in the disaster.
